

TEACHING GETS ON HIGH PLANE AT ILLINOIS 'U'

College Established at State University Placing It on Basis of High Profession.

The school of education at the university of Illinois has now become the college of education, the establishment of a college putting the profession of teaching on the same scholastic and professional basis as liberal arts and sciences, agriculture, law, engineering, medicine and commerce.

After years of planning, during which the curriculum in education has been developed and the necessary equipment has been secured, the new college will open for the enrollment of students next September. The college of education will accomplish a number of important services in modern education. It will train high school teachers in all subjects taught in high schools and administrators and supervisors for special subjects. It will train research and bureau investigators and will instruct all teachers in methods of scientific investigation in teaching. The curriculum will provide both theory and experience in class procedure and the college will also organize teachers for purposes of mutual advancement and for state service.

In training, teachers for every college will have affiliation with every college and department in the university whose subjects are taught in the high schools of Illinois. It will work in cooperation with the college of agriculture in the department of agricultural education and home economics; with the college of engineering in the department of industrial education; with the department of physics; with the college of commerce in the department of commercial education; with the school of music in the department of public school music and with the library school in the department of school libraries. It will also have affiliations with 17 departments of the college of liberal arts and sciences in which subjects taught in the high schools are studied. They are the following: art, biological science (botany, zoology and physiology), classics, English, German, history, mathematics, physical science (physics, chemistry and geology), romance languages

(French and Spanish), and sociological science (economics, political science and sociology). The first course in education offered at the university of Illinois was announced in 1867 among the offerings of the "department of mental and moral philosophy," all of which were given by Dr. John M. Gregory, first regent of the university. The same announcements for the "department" were repeated, with slight modifications, in successive years up to 1889 when courses in pedagogy were announced. The designation "education" replaced "pedagogy" in the university catalogue for 1900 and in 1905 the work in education had become so important that the board of trustees sanctioned the organization of a school of education. In 1913 the interest of the state legislature in the school of education was furthered by appropriating $125,000 for a school of education building to be used primarily as a training school. Later additional plans were approved, the cornerstone was laid in 1917, and the building will be completed this summer. In 1918 the school of education was made a college of education and the work and interest in the service of education to the state was furthered by the establishment of the bureau of educational research the same year. The new college will be open for students next September but since the university high school will not open until 1920, practice teaching cannot be provided in any subjects except agriculture and home economics. However, the following persons may enroll next September: all students who are members of the junior class in September 1919 and three groups of seniors, viz, seniors with successful experience in teaching; seniors in agricultural education and seniors in home economics, whose teaching experience has been provided for. Two years of college credit (65 hours) will be required for admission, with the exception of students who are specializing in physical education and industrial education. These will be admitted to the college of education in the freshman year and will take a four-year course within the college of education. The degree of bachelor of science is conferred upon the completion of the curriculum of 55 hours in the college.
